Germans in this city who heard the description of the man married at the City Hall and who remembered the Schlemangk in the captain's uniform and who have seen pictures of the fugitive printed in the German papers, said yesterday that the three agreed closely.

At the German Consulate it was said yesterday that the only records which they have upon the Count de Passy are in the shape of memorands which came to the consulate in 1890 from a source that was not of any considerable value. In the consulate in 1890 from a source that was not of any considerable value. In these notes it appears that Count Victor L de Passy, which is the same name as that given by the bridegroom for his father, adopted a son twenty-one years ago. The older man was then in the prime of life and the only theory that could be advanced at the consulate was that it might be this adopted son who had been getting into trouble abroad. His age on the City Hall records would make this entirely possible.

The consulate isn't at all sure that the crime for which Schiemangk is wanted on the officials believe that within a few days they will be able to shed considerable light on the coincidences that link the names of Schiemangk and the Count de Passy.

OFFERS EVIDENCE TO BOLSTER

One Witness Tells of Seeing a Bearded Man With a Gun Three Miles From Scene of Murder, and Another Saw Man Near Who Seemed to Be Crazy.

CHESTERPIELD COURTHOUSE, Va., Aug. The grave business of Henry Clay Beattie's defence against the charge of wife murder began to-day after the Commonwealth's lawyers had rested their

Before his lawyer, Harry Smith, Jr., had been at work an hour he had introduced a witness who swore that on the evening of the day when Mrs. Beattie was murdered on Midlothian turnpike he had seen a rough looking man answering in a vague way the description of Mrs. Beattie's assailant, as the prisoner himself has given it, who was walking along the tracks of the Southern Railway. hree miles away from the scene of the homicide, with a single barrel shotgun ver his shoulder

Up to the close of to-day's session no further testimony tending to trace the movements of this armed man from 5:30 o'clock to near 11 o'clock, when Mrs. Beattie was fired upon, had been entered. Another witness, who seemed to be very vague as to his facts, had taken the stand to testify that he had seen an unusual looking man on the Midlothian turnpike on three separate occasions before July 18, the day of the murder, but that was as far as he went

So far as Beattie's defence revealed itself in the three and more hours of its opening this afternoon it was shown that no attempt will be made to dodge the story which the prisoner has told of his HOTEL CASHIER IS ACCUSED wife having been slain by the charge of a single barrelled shotgun, fired at a range of about six feet by a man unknown to Beattie. There was no hint of a possible defence of insanity, which had been rumored in the early days of the case no attempt to establish the ground for a verdict of involuntary manslaughter through the mishandling of the gun in Beattie's own hands

The young man's lawyers have evi dently decided to stand or fall by the Frank J. Dorlan, cashier of the Hotel unusual story that their client has interposed in the face of the strongly circum stantial evidence against him.

Attorney Smith said to-day that Henry own behalf until the rest of the case of W. R. Holland was the witness who laid

Paul Beattie, the chief witness for the prosecution, was called by the defence as their first witness, and from the questions put to him it is evident that Beattie's lawyers are laying the ground for an explanation of how the shotgun, bought at Henry Beattie's orders and said by Paul Beattie to have been delivered to the accused on the Saturday might prior to the murder, fell into the hands of the unknown man whom they accept as the murderer.

The lawyers wanted Paul to be very sure that he did not have the gun with him after its purchase and while he was doing duty as watchman on Mayo's Bridge and that he did not leave it in a building known as the Cement House near the bridge. It was evident that the defence will attempt to show that the gun was stolen from him after its purchase and never delivered to Henry Beattie.
